Bad Accounts Kate McVaugh
Top notch accountant Pia might have suspected her bosses of cooking the books, but when you're fifty-two and jobs are scarce, it's easy to look the other way. Or it is until you find out that your employers might be managing the finances of a drug cartel, right there in your hometown. Stealing a few files to implicate her bosses seemed like a good idea… until Pia finds a gun in her front yard, apparently dropped by an inept hitman. Maybe she should have listened to Brad and quit her job instead of absconding with the incriminating documents. But it's too late for regrets now, and she's a marked woman. Luckily for Pia, Brad puts his surfing on hold long enough to help get her out of town and down to Ocean Beach. Unfortunately, that might not be enough. Crossing the border into Mexico may be the only answer. From Monterey, California, all the way to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, aging gangsters, bungling rent-a-cops, and an out-of-his-element hitman, thwart Pia's every move. But with the help of a few surfers and their friends, she's determined to not only stay alive, but to see the drug cartel shut down once and for all.
