A Voice in the Wind Donald Risho
"A Voice In the Wind" is a romantic novel dating back to that ill-fated period in history, the American Civil War. Fictional characters are placed into historical events with notable personalities. A variety of diverse individuals encounter one another and weave an intricate web of unforgettable episodes. Everyone in the story is reluctantly caught in the turmoil of that dismal period. The leading figure in this epic tale is a young, passive school teacher from New Hampshire, named David. Like so many others, he is unwittingly pulled into the great struggle between the North and the South. Throughout the story, David keeps a daily journal, at various times shared with the reader. He writes faithfully about his experiences before and after battle. Also, the worthy men and the villainous rogues that have touched his life. He shares his inner most thoughts. David is merely a voice in the wind in this timeless classic.
