Intellectual Freedom and Access to Resources in the Information Age Frank W. Hoffmann
This annotated bibliography--which focuses on the literature of the latter decades of the 20th century (a second volume is currently being produced which covers 21st century resources)--has attempted to reflect both the complexities and universality of the censoring phenomenon. References span the full breadth of social behavior, arranged under the broad headings of Censorship and the First Amendment, Institutions and Professions, and the Mass Media. Included within these units are the workplace, religion and family issues, politics and civil affairs, education, technological endeavors, and leisure time activities.
