Gender Oppression and Globalization: Challenges for Social Work Janet L. Finn, Sharvari Karandikar, Tonya Evette Perry
This edited volume critically explores the intersection of globalization and gender oppression, the mutually shaping relationship between the two, and the implications for social work. Contributors engage in critical feminist inquiry regarding the well-being of women and girls in the context of globalization, focusing on their vulnerabilities and resilience, the forms and mechanisms of oppression shaping their lives, and possibilities for social action.

Council on Social Work Education

We are a nonprofit national association representing individual members and graduate and undergraduate programs of professional social work education. Founded in 1952, this partnership of educational and professional institutions, social welfare agencies, and private citizens is recognized by the Council for Higher Education Accreditation as the sole accrediting agency for social work education in this country.
